About this piece

Description

British, c.1870. An Anglo-Japanese rush-seat chair from the Aesthetic Movement period, showing the geometric balance and linear precision typical of early Japanese-inspired design in Britain. The ebonised frame is constructed with squared legs and lattice back rails joined by turned stretchers. The woven rush seat provides a natural contrast to the dark finish. This form reflects the influence of E. W. Godwin and the wider adoption of Japanese proportion and simplicity within domestic furniture of the 1870s.

Seat Height: 34.8cm / 13.58 in
