About this piece

This dining table in oak, made in the Arts and Crafts style c.1900, follows the design vocabulary associated with Liberty and Co. The rectangular top is constructed from plain-sawn boards with a shallow moulded edge above shaped corner brackets that curve into the aprons.

The legs are square in section, flaring subtly at the base, and joined by a central stretcher with pegged mortise-and-tenon joints, giving structural integrity and visual weight. The form combines simple geometric lines with sculpted details typical of Liberty's workshop designs for domestic interiors.
